Excerpt: ...himself by considering unproduc-tive consumers necessary, 32--believes, erroneously, that it is necessary to produce a value which is greater than the costs of production, 34--is alarmed at increase of capital, 34--is against saving, 36,38,42, note--compares the increase of capital to that of children, 42--is against paying off the national debt, 53--attributes no other advantage to the in-vention of machines than increasing the sale of commo-dities, 62--his definition of riches examined, 75. Manufacturer; how a producer, 14--compared with a farmer, 25--why his revenue increased by machinery, although re-duced by competition, 66. Market; want of attributed to want of production, 48--want of in the United States for the productions of commerce, and not for others, 54--shut or diminished inconsequence of the dearness of productions, 58. Matter; nothing in Political Economy, 21, 22. Materials, the original; have no other value than that of the la-bour by which they have been produced (note), 34. Money; is only a transitory agent by means of which what we have to sell is exchanged for what we want to buy, 2, 14. Mills, corn; benefits to consumers from their employment, 66. Nations; are able to purchase all they produce, 26, 27--but not to produce every thing they desire, 43--their convulsions foreseen, 46--are richer in proportion as their productions are cheaper, 82. Nature; it is by obeying that she is commanded, 64. Net produce of lands; useless subject of discussion, 61. New York; why sales are effected there which could not have been so two hundred years ago, 4. New Orleans; destined to become one of the greatest marts in the world, 57. Population, of France, supposed capable of being doubled, 44--it would then be less rude, 45. Price...
