

ISLE OF THE WOMEN: Are some secrets best left buried?

1946: far out in the Atlantic a boatload of men returning from war are shipwrecked within sight of their homes on the remote Scottish island of Kulah and the wailing of the women could be heard across the sea on neighbouring Battersay. But the women are also hiding a shameful secret Present Day: When journalist Ally Niven escapes to the remote Scottish island of Battersay after a failed love affair, all she is looking for is a quiet life and a catering job for the summer. But from the outset someone is trying to scare her off and Ally soon discovers that the beautiful surroundings mask tensions among the people who are harbouring Birdwoman - a feral young woman found on rocky Kulah. Ally is increasingly attracted to reclusive artist, John Balmain, who has also taken refuge on Battersay, but is elusive about his past. Increasingly isolated and intimidated by bizarre attacks on her house, Ally sets out to discover the truth behind the Kulah story and the secrets John is determined to keep from her; as the two stories converge in a shocking climax. This is Amy Charles second enthralling mystery. Previously published as The Haunting of Kulah.
