

Washburn: Extraordinary Adventures Of A Young Mountaineer

Bradford Washburn is well known for his daring climbs of the worlds highest peaks, his pioneering work in aerial photography and mountain cartography, and founding the internationally renown Boston Museum of Science. But his bold exploits started long before he first set eyes on McKinley and the Yukon. As a teenager, Washburn climbed Mount Washington--home of the worst weather in the world--in winter; scaled unclimbed peaks in the French Alps; and with a team of Harvard Mountaineers, made a second ascent of 15,500-foot Mount Fairweather, the highest peak in Alaskas coastal range. Now readers can learn about these extraordinary adventures in Washburns own words in this collection of his early works: Among the Alps with Bradford, Bradford on Mount Washington, and Bradford on Mount Fairweather. In each book, the teenage Washburn describes his adventures in vivid detail, including the shockingly simple techniques he and his climbing buddies relied upon to scale some of the worlds most ferocious peaks in the 1920s. Washburns boyish clarity of purpose and enthusiasm offer insight into the incredibly accomplished author, photographer, lecturer, and mapmaker that he would become. Originally published as part of G.P. Putnams Sons true-life adventure series Boys Books by Boys nearly 80 years ago, this exclusive collection is not just for young adults. Mountain historians, followers of Washburns life and work, or anyone who loves a gripping story of adventure will be entertained, engaged, and inspired.
