

Jungs Gospel: We also live in our dreams

Jungs Gospel is an exploration of meaning and import of Jungs RED book. One could understand the RED book as: 1) A Gnostic soul journey, a kind of Kabbalah mystical soul experience journey. 2) A personal mental breakdown of Jung, and his resolution and emergence from that mental breakdown. 3) A reworking of all the religious teaching he has received in life and his reconciliation with his scientific understanding of human psychology to create a new personal faith for himself. 4) An exposition of Jungs psychological theories as a computer model of the brain - and decoding of fantasies and archetypes as windows into the subconscious that aided this decoding. 5) A gospel refuting Nietzsches nihilism. 6) A work in spirit and style of Nietzsche transposing his thoughts into psychological terms. 7) A reworking of ancient mythology into the context of psychology theory. 8) An extended experiment on the possibilities of active imagination 9) An extended embedding of religious life into archetypal language. 10) An extended exploration of archetypal images surrounding faith. 11) A Tarot Journey with Tarot mythology connected to Jungian concepts This list is not exhaustive. Ive chosen to focus on RED book as a gospel although I will touch on all the above. I believe it was a gospel born of an inner soul journey by Jung. As I pull out the gospel message, some of the messages will be fairly straightforward, straight from Jungs text, however, the majority will be interpretative. Ill be reading Jungs text, and saying here is what it means to me, this is what Jung is saying to me. As such my interpretation is not necessarily the only interpretation or the right interpretation. Jung, at least on the surface, seems to adopt Nietzsches nihilism, which might be summarised by the statement that everything is meaningless. The nihilist unfortunately discovers that all values are baseless and that reason is impotent. Jung almost agrees, but then he discovers the spirit of the depths, the collective unconscious, and deep archetypes that infuse our entire life with meaning. Jung understands that these are not things we create, that the reality that archetypes embody exist outside of reason, critique, and understanding. At one point Jung in the RED book in the section on divine folly Jung says in effect that one can throw away all of Christianity, reject it all, not believe any of it, only to discover that it is reborn inside of you. As we journey through Jungs adventure, I extract 259 principles of Good News. Here are a few examples: GM #2 Meaning and Absurdity coexist ; GM#12 You cannot measure the soul; GM#20 Be slaves neither to virtues nor vices; GM #77 Sexuality is complex - accept it. Jung here gives support to LGBT community. GM#129 A universe without God is unbearable; GM #179 Each person is to take up their own cross. GM #198 Life depends on magic; GM #216 Living in the light is moving towards the image of God. GM#233 Everything important in life is a paradox. GM #246 Individualization is the great cosmic force. These 259 principles form the heart of Jungs religious thinking. Ive also included a section on Jungs computer model of the brain, which computer scientists might find of use in constructing artificial intelligence models. I ends with comparison between Teilhard de Chardins Christian thinking and Jungs Christian thinking. Although their approaches are vastly different they come to surprisingly similar conclusions.
