

Rosie the Riveter: Women Working on the Home Front in World War II

Illustrated with black-and-white photographs. When Americas men went off towar in 1942, millions of women were recruited, through posters and otherpropaganda, to work at non-traditional jobs. In defense plants, factories, offices, and everywhere else workers were needed, they were--for the firsttime--well paid and financially independent. But eventually the war ended, andthe government and industries that had once persuaded them to work for the wareffort now instructed them to return home and take care of their husbands andchildren. Based on interviews and original research by noted historian PennyColman, Rosie the Riveter shows young readers how women fought World WarII from the home front.
