

Knighthshade - The Vampire Brothers (French Horror Book 7)

Written in 1860 - almost 40 years before Bram Stokers Dracula - Knighthshade is one of three classic vampire stories (also available from Black Coat Press) penned by Paul Feval, along with Vampire City and The Vampire Countess. Educated men say that they are the tombs of two French noblemen, the Tenebre Brothers, who came with many others to help the voivode John Hunyadi defend Christendom against the Turks four hundred years ago. Men who are not educated affirm that for four centuries there has lain beneath these marble slabs an oupire and a vampire: one an eater of human flesh, the other a drinker of human blood. On many occasions, during the four hundred years, those graves have opened, to the terror and the horror of the surrounding country. Sometimes, two corpses were found beneath the stones, one tall and one short, which gave every indication of recent death: eyes open and shining, blood liquid in the veins, tongues moist and lips red.
